New Beaded and Spangled Robes

Paris is maintaining her reputation for simplicity in dress, despite all efforts to the contrary, writes a Paris fashion correspondent. There is something so attractively youthful about the simple dress that it is difficult to persuade the smart Parisienne to accept the more complicated and elaborate models.

However, the Paris dressmaker realizes that the continuance of these simple styles will be a detriment to her. It will be like killing the goose that laid the golden egg; so strenuous efforts will be made with the opening of the fall season to divert attention from the simple styles to more elaborate effects.

One of the first indications of the splendor of fall attire is the introduction of beaded and spangled robes. There is hardly a Paris dressmaker in the most wonderful shadings; thus a gown can be worked out in a variety of stitches and materials, all in one tone.

One no longer sees a robe entirely spangled nor one done entirely in cup-shaped motifs. But there are squares, triangles, oblong, pointed, round, faceted and tube shapes in varying sizes, sewn according to intricately traced designs on nets of deep tone; thus making the background as well as the embroidery in one color.

Shapes, Forms for Every Taste.

Many of these beautiful robes have been especially executed for the Paris dressmakers after their own designs, and they come from the hands of the manufacturer almost a perfect dress with sleeves, décolletage, waistline, skirt fullness, length and shape dictated by the highest Paris fashion authorities.

There are shapes and forms to please every taste; tunics cut high in the neck in what is known as décolletage, without sleeves or with very short ones, if any. Other models having the straight-around décolletage with only tiny jeweled shoulder straps and bodice are cut off just below the curve of the bust.

Again the bodice takes the form of a bib at the front, the back and sides of the figure being left almost nude. In addition to the straight chemise form there are tunics in which the skirts are entirely complete; others in which that part known as the skirt is formed of a succession of festoons or fringes. Other models are long straight panels open at the sides.

Styles of 1830 Leave Imprint.

The quantities of these beaded tunics that have been exported give evidence that all the big stores in America are anticipating a large demand for them. One may expect, therefore, that the beaded tunic will be seen in town and hamlet as well as in the cities.

Although it appears impossible to overcome the liking for simple black silk frocks for daytime, the handsomest of evening dresses are being made from gorgeous materials in bright colors. The feeling of the 1830 period is very strong in model dresses for the evening.

There are any number of very full skirts, most of which are very long, some almost touching the floor. In the skirts of more slender outline some part of the frock is made to trail, for while the skirt when slender is long, it is considered desirable to give the effect of even greater length by trailing points and panels.

Much silver lace and velvet ribbon are used as trimming on satin and silk dresses.

Lanvin has just brought out some charming dance frocks in satins of the brightest shades, such as shrimp pink, and trims them most elaborately with metal laces and large applique motifs of natter blue velvet.

Harks Back to Earlier Days.

The way in which Lanvin has applied the velvet trimming is most unusual. The bodice pointed far down in the front and ending at the normal waistline—a revival of a very old-time style—is seen in ever so many of these Lanvin frocks.

Callot makes charming evening gowns entirely of cloth of gold, combining with it gold tulle and black velvet. These have the very long skirt, but are of much slimmer outline than the Lanvin frocks referred to above.

The new evening capes are the loveliest ever, and the interesting point is that they are very long, frequently touching the floor. They are made of the richest materials, wonderfully combined.

Lovely Capes Made in Black

Jenny has a great fancy for using a broad back panel of gorgeous brocade, to which are joined the front pieces made in a plain satin, which she elaborately embroiders at the bottom in a pattern exactly matching that of the brocade. She has lovely capes of this kind made in black and gold brocade joined to plain black satin on which the embroidery repeats exactly the pattern of the brocade. It is a fascinating idea and one of which only a Parisian dressmaker could conceive.

Very gorgeous evening coats made of brocades, for instance, coral pink and silver, are broken into panels by insertions of silver lace, one edge of the lace being allowed to float free. Often there are six or eight panels of this kind in the width of the cape. All of the silver lace reads one way, and the effect when worn is almost that of a half-closed fan with the lace edging each rib of the frame.

Another wonderful panel effect in an evening wrap, also a creation of Jenny, is a black satin wrap with a broad white panel in the center of the lining. This, of course, is revealed only when the cape is thrown open or left to fall off the shoulders, as many of them are.

The favorite way of hitching on the new cape is by the use of big cablecord of metal or silk, which encircles the base of a very narrow collar and ties around the shoulder after the fashion of the Spanish bull fighter. In fact, the cravat for the cape, is distinctly of Spanish origin; likewise the shawl.

Full Cape Attachment.

Sometimes gowns have a delicate back! A black velvet frock of the style called "skimp" has a full cape attachment of black crepe de chine trimmed at four-inch intervals with half-inch bands of Hudson seal.
